R UZICA ROMCIVIC, twenty, a pretty Croatian picture bride, was brought over from Ellis Island to-day to the Marriage License Bureau by the Travelers' Aid Society to meet for the first time her betrothed, Rade Buletich, a coal miner, of Masontown, Pa.

Ruzica, dainty, diminutive, birdlike, gazed at Rade, bigboned, heavy-shouldered, with digt-begrimed nails, shuffling from one foot to another. "I cant' marry him," Ruzica announced in cultivated Croatian. "I am well educated; I have been reared to expect a different sort of man. He looks like a good man, and I'm sorry for him, but I can't marry him."

Rade didn't say anything, but the Travelers' Aid Agent told Ruzica she couldn't remain in the country unless relatives or Rade, as her husband, supported her. Ruzica returned to the island to bunt for relatives.
